Justification: In keeping with the Department of History's revamping of its programs and curriculum in response to our most recent undergraduate program review and with the university's new Academic Plan (and the department's own five-year plan), this course is being created following the discontinuation of the full-year credits History 2301, 2501, and a half year course 2513. It replaces the first half of 2301 and 2501 and 2513 which contained a range of content duplication. It also ensures that students progressing through our curriculum have a much broader prerequisite background for the accompanying half-courses being calendared. It also responds to resource issues created due to the loss and reappointment of faculty in the past year.

Course Description: A broad survey of Canadian history after 1850 exploring social, political, military, economic, and cultural perspectives. Issues examined can include political struggles and development, aboriginal claims and conflicts, immigration, social reform, regionalism, gender, modernization, and multiculturalism. The course will address such topics as Canada's involvement in overseas conflicts, the Great Depression, constitutional adjustments, and Canada's changing place in the world.

Rationale for this proposal: In keeping with the Department of History's revamping of its programs and curriculum in response to our most recent undergraduate program review and with the university's new Academic Plan (and the department's own five-year plan), this course is being created following the discontinuation of the full-year credit 2301 and the creation of a two new half courses. It replaces the second half of 2301. It also responds to resource issues created due to the loss and reappointment of faculty in the past year.

Proposed Version

Course Description: A broad survey of the United States from the post-Civil War period to the present day emphasizing the political, economic, and social developments of the nation. It explores major events in the recent American experience, such as world wars, the Great Depression, and the Civil Rights Movement, but will also focus attention on overarching themes, such as race, gender, class, region, consumerism, and technological innovations, which have uniquely defined modern America.

Rationale for this proposal: In keeping with the Department of History's revamping of its programs and curriculum in response to our most recent undergraduate program review and with the university's new Academic Plan (and the department's own five-year plan), this course is being created following the discontinuation of the full-year credit 2501 and the creation of a two new half courses.
