Section J

Description of the Proposed Calendar Change:

Add prerequisite, modify course description.

Rationale of the Proposed Calendar Change(s):

(Corresponding to Section 4 writing required)

There is currently no prerequisite for this course. My experience teaching this course is that students who lack training in Invertebrate Zoology are ill prepared to successfully attempt this course. Therefore, to adequately prepare students for this I require having Invertebrate Zoology as a prerequisite. There also is a modification of the calendar description to better reflect the course.

Biology 4111 Parasitology

3-3; or 3-3

Study of the protozoan, helminth and arthropod parasites. Emphasis is placed on parasitism as a biological phenomenon. Laboratory work will be concerned with a study of the structure and identification of representative parasites as well as an explanation of techniques used in parasitology.

Biology 4111 Parasitology

3-3; OR 3-3

Prerequisite: Biology 3221 or permission of the instructor.

Emphasis is placed on parasitism as a biological phenomenon and its occurrence across phyla, especially within the protozoa, helminth and arthropods. Laboratory work will be concerned with a study of the structure and identification of representative parasites, experimental study of the transmission dynamics, ecology and life cycles of parasites, as well as an explanation of techniques used in parasitology.
