Course Description:

This course explores what it means to be human in contemporary society, as well as in different times and different places. We will assess how anthropologists use information about our beliefs, fears, modes of communication, behaviours, lifestyles, activity, diet, and health, gathered from various sources in the past and present, to gain a holistic perspective on human and cultural diversity. We will examine how the relationship between culture, biology and the environment has shaped the evolution of the human species. Through a variety of teaching modalities including weekly recorded lectures, films and the course textbook, you will develop skills that will help you better understand yourself, others and the world around us.
