What is the pedagogical rationale for this request? Why are you submitting this request?:	This course fills a gap at the second year level in history, and will prepare students for course offerings in Russian and East European history at the third and fourth year levels To make History courses available to non-History majors. For example, is this change required for accreditation?
Learning Outcomes:	Students who complete this course shall: 1. Gain a solid grounding in major themes and developments in the history of the Soviet Union and postcommunist Russia. 2. Gain a critical appreciation of the successes and failures of the Soviet state. 3. Be able to situate Soviet and post-Soviet history in comparative and transnational context. 4. Gain a critical understanding of the resurgence of nationalism and populism in Russia since 1991. 5. Work with a variety of primary and secondary sources, and think critically about the ways in which these sources can be used to help historians understand and analyze developments in modern and premodern Russian history as social, political, ideological, cultural, and intellectual phenomena. 6. Develop writing and critical-analytical skills suitable to the university level.

Is this a required course, or an elective?:
What is the pedagogical rationale for this request? Why are you submitting this request?:	The rationale for offering this new course is that during the 2010 Undergraduate Review the instructor was asked to consider offering courses like those proposed, given his experience in the area. Secondly, the new course is a refinement of, and will replace, a special topic course called "Third World Film in Historical Perspective" that the instructor has taught in the past. Finally, the instructor does not have many course offerings at the 3rd year level and these courses would provide both the instructor and students with new academic options.
