Rationale There are two changes being made to this program, all of them are either budget neutral or save money: changing 4th year inquiry from 2 half-credit courses to one full-year course (CRIM 4801) and changing the area requirements to bring them in line with the new Senate-mandated course classification scheme. 1) The proposed course, INTD 4XXX is replacing the INTD 4010 and 4032 sequence of courses. In the present sequence of courses, students develop a research project in INTD 4010 and carrying out in INTD 4032. INTD 4010 is open to all Interdisciplinary Studies students, with multiple sections being offered, whereas INTD 4032 is intended specifically for Criminology students. The current arrangement means that Criminology students could develop a research project under the supervision of one instructor in INTD 4010, who typically does not have expertise in Criminology, and attempt to complete the project with a different instructor (who does have expertise in Criminology) in INTD 4032. This could lead to students being inadequately instructed in the design of a Criminology-relevant thesis project in INTD 4010 and possibly having to redesign their project in INTD 4032. This can be a frustrating experience for students. We, therefore, propose to	Rationale There are two a few minor changes being made to this program, all of them are either budget neutral or save money: changing 4th year inquiry from 2 half-credit courses to one full-year course (CRIM 4801) and changing the area requirements to bring them in line with the new Senate-mandated course classification scheme. 1) The proposed course, INTD 4XXX is replacing the INTD 4010 and 4032 sequence of courses. replace INTD 4010 and INTD 4030 with a single year-long course, CRIM 4801 Honours Research Project. This would ensure that the same instructor with expertise in Criminology oversees the project from development to completion. 2) In May 2014, Senate passed a motion for all departments to classify their open undergraduate courses according to a new A, B, C, D classification scheme. Although not specifically mandated by this motion, it was anticipated that programs with breadth requirements would adopt this new classification scheme in redefining their breadth requirements. The HBASC.CRIM.TRF degree in Interdisciplinary Studies has such breadth requirements. Students are required to take 2 FCEs in Area I (social sciences and humanities), 2 FCEs in Area II (natural sciences and other NSERC funded fields), and they were forbidden from specializing in or taking more than 2 FCEs in Area III (professional and other applied fields). We aim to align our breadth requirements with the new classification scheme in the following way: Area I will be dropped and replaced with Type A (humanities) and Type B (social sciences) courses and Area II will be dropped and replaced with Type C (natural sciences) and Type D (health and behavioural sciences) courses. Because the Senate proposal exhaustively classifies all courses as Type A, B, C, or D, this excludes the possibility of any Area III equivalent in the new system. We, therefore, propose to eliminate Area III and all the restrictions previously placed on Area III.	4010 and INTD 4030 with a single year-long course; CRIM 4801 Honours Research Project. First of all, the type A, B, C, and D courses breadth requirements are being identified more specifically and notes are added to the elective lines to remind students of the requirements. Secondly the Indigenous Content requirement is being met via Type E courses, as indicated in the note, although two of these are being "recommended" because their subject matter is most topically relevant. Thirdly, in keeping with the new concentrations introduced this year, we are enabling students to fulfill the first and third year inquiry requirements via any of the first year and third year Interdisciplinary Studies courses respectively (INTD 1010, 10aa, 10xx, 10yy, or 10zz and INTD 3010, 30aa, 30xx, 30yy, or 30zz; see 2015-soc-5322 and 2015-soc-5324).
